Speaking Of Cuba

IT APPEARS that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has been running into difficulties in its attempt to get a full closed-door session on the story of the Cuban fiasco.

DULLES

Secretary of State Rusk is in Turkey and not available for testimony. Acting Secretary of State Bowles is being chided by Sen. Wayne Morse for "absence of liaison." Allen Dulles, CIA chief, has been asked to testify and has suggested that the committee invite Adolf Berle instead.

The committee should—and no doubt will—keep pushing for the closed-door session, no matter how long it takes. The Cuban flop is over for the moment. But the best way to insure against another flop in the future is to find exactly what went wrong the first time.

The subject has been aired, but it can stand a lot more examination.
